Ki — A Light Energy that Fills Mind, Body and Soul vol.10

Sending Ki to lost spirits

When people receive Shinkiko energy, some just feel good or some feel nothing; but sometimes spirits who are black strangers to Ki receivers start talking through them. By sending Shinkiko energy to the soul of a person, the spirits who have united with the Ki receiver before he knew it, and have been affecting him, will emerge. The spirits can no longer stay there because the energy of the Ki receiver changed and it made them feel uncomfortable staying inside him. In many cases, the spirits talk about their spiritual pains and sorrows.

When people receive Ki, they are all awake; they just wonder why they feel sick and why their bodies react in unexpected ways. The spirits who appear just want someone to know how hurt they are.

The light of Shinkiko energy does not reach to negative-minded spirits. They are in a jet black, not knowing where they are. Even if there is someone who is much more hurt than they are, they cannot notice him.

So, they just keep sinking to the dark bottom of a negative energy vortex, saying "What have I done to deserve this? I must be the only one who's having such a tough time."

Such spirits sometimes affect someone who has a similar vibrating energy as theirs, or someone who is related to them, or their offspring; and make him feel or experience the negative things (such as diseases) that they experienced.

Even we, the living people sometimes feel better or relieved when we share our pains with someone. When we share, the energies the both sides have connect and sympathize with each other and heighten.

But if the one who gives energy to others do not have enough energy, he will run short of it and seemingly bad symptoms appear in his body and mind. If he spiritually awakens and becomes able to solve the problems he has in a positive way, the amount of his energy gradually increases and he becomes able to keep giving energy to others; but if he can not, both he and the ones that receive energy from him, remain full of grief.

Suppose that a person who died of chest trouble appeared before one of his offspring in order to let him know his (often the offspring has no idea who this ancestor is) pain. And the offspring started claiming that his chest hurt and understood the hard way how his ancestor was suffering.

At this stage, the energies of the two are just sympathizing with each other. Soon, the offspring, who has a physical body, will be short of energy; and bad things will happen to him such as being sick for a long time and having bad lucks. The offspring is made to experience the similar things as what his ancestor experienced;

if he can be spiritually awakened and change himself, he will be able to increase energy and to let his ancestor's spirit feel better. But if he does not have enough energy himself, it is not that easy.

With Ki products such as the High Genki apparatus, you can charge your soul with Shinkiko energy and feel better; and at the same time, they allow you to send energies to other spirits who are suffering. Also, they encourage both the Ki sender and the receiver to be spiritually awakened, and to lead wandering spirits to the world of light.

What is needed is consecrating the spirit; not dispelling it

I have seen a TV show in which a person called psychic dispelled evil spirits that had haunted someone. In the show, the psychic spiritually saw his client and found out why the haunted spirit had been suffering; and then dispelled it by casting a spell-like thing.

But there is always a reason for spiritual phenomena to occur; some spirits do affect people badly, but in many cases, they are the spirits of people deeply related to you either by blood or something. And such spirits allow us to learn something; to be spiritually awakened and to heighten the energy of our souls. So, just dispelling them will not fundamentally solve problems. It is more important to heighten our energies; to become spiritually awakened on our own; to be able to send positive energies to haunted spirits and let them be spiritually awakened, and to let the spirits go to where they belong.

None of the spirits are inherently evil. Negative-minded spirits are just the ones who became stuck as they gathered much of negative Ki due to various misunderstandings during their process of spiritual growth, and are in need of help. So, if they receive a strong positive Ki, and find out where they should head for, the negative-minded spirits will turn into positive, like a game of Othello, and become like spiritual guardians who support people from an intangible world.

The late chairman always used to say, "Just dispelling spirits will not help; what's needed is purifying them." Even if you do not have a gift to interact with spirits, if you learn about spirits and the relationship between them and the living people, you can heighten both the energy of yourself and of the spirits, and allow them and yourself to go the next step that is full of high and bright energies, by keep sending positive energy to them.

Consequently, the Shinkiko energy allows you to grow spiritually increasing more positive energies, together with the spirits related to you.
